Chicago White Sox All-Star pitcher Liam Hendriks' successful battle with cancer has become an inspiration throughout the sports world and beyond.
Hendriks underwent cancer treatment at Mayo Clinic in Phoenix, Arizona following his announcement that he had been diagnosed with stage 4 non-Hodgkin's lymphoma one of the most common cancers in the United States affecting an estimated 90,000 people per year.
Now, cancer-free and back on the mound for the White Sox, Hendriks has been named as a recipient of a 2023 ESPN ESPY award where he expressed heartfelt gratitude for his healthcare team at Mayo Clinic.
Hendriks sat down to talk with us about his remarkable journey and the three words that gave him hope.	\//DE0

Hendriks underwent several months of cancer treatment including rounds of immunotherapy and chemotherapy.
(SOT)	Allison Rosenthal, D.O.,
"That's pretty standard for anybody who has enough going on	hematology/oncology or enough symptoms to warrant that kind of treatment. And so, what he received has been a proven therapy for a long time and we were hoping to get by with that being all he needed, and everything being all cleared up, and thankfully that's where we ended up."

During treatment, Hendriks continued to practice and train with support from Dr. Rosenthal, a former athlete and cancer survivor herself.
(SOT)
"I try to understand for all my patients, what their life is like outside of here, what is important to you. Because I think the more we can keep people in their usual habits and patterns like that, it just helps things feel regular."
(TRACK)
In less than four months of treatment, Hendriks announced he was cancer-free and returning to the mound with deeper gratitude and the desire to help others close out cancer.

"I wouldn't be here tonight without my wife, my incredible team at Mayo Clinic, especially Dr. Allison Rosenthal. She is one of the main reasons that I'm up here tonight."
(SOT)
"In the words of Jimmy V, never give up. Never give up and I won't either."
